Once a traveller had two horses. The tail of one was long while that of the other was short. He was travelling from place to place to sell his horses. One night he stayed in an inn. The innkeeper put fodder before the horses and in the end brought the bill. The traveller saw that in the bill the cost of the fodder for one horse was more than for the other. He thought it was a mistake and asked the innkeeper to correct it. The innkeeper told him that it was correct. The innkeeper said, "Both the horses cannot eat at the same rate. The one with a long tail eats more because as it is eating, it can keep off flies with its tail. The other has a short tail and it keeps off flies with its head. So while eating, it moves its head this way and that way; so it eats less". The traveller was pleased with the reply of the innkeeper and paid his bill.
